WASHINGTON, Nov. 18 .- The "Labor dinner" given at the White House last night was of "illuminative value," according to a statement made to friends to-day by President Roosevelt. Whether last night's function will result in recommendations bearing on the labor question in the President's annual message to Congress remains to be developed. The impression prevails that the subject will be touched upon in the State paper will be touched upon in the State paper. The President believes that he served the public weal in bringing together around the table in the State dining room Justices of the Supreme Court, high Federal officers and men representing sic. the various trades. By a liberal interchange of views, such as was had on. matters affecting workingmen at the dinner, the officers, including the Justices of the Supreme Court, had an opportunity to learn first hand just what the labor unions desire and what opinion labor leaders hold as to legislation needed for their general uplift and what their opinions are of the high courts and judicial interpretation.

guests present at the dinner last night pursued the discussion of the topics raised there at the White House to-day. They were Labor Commissioner Charles P. Neill, Edward J. Gavegan, "an attorney for labor unions," and Charles H. Sherrill, a New York lawyer.

They discussed with the President the plan he suggested last night of getting the representatives of organized labor together in agreement on plans for legislation. The President pointed out to his guests that there was a divergence of opinion on the subject of anti-injunction legislation and that so long as there was no concert of action results could hardly be obtained. The President has little or no hope of securing labor legislation of any sweeping character at the next session of Congress, but he desires to leave a legacy to his countrymen and to his successor in office in the shape of certain broad recommendations or "policies" for the benefit of labor, based upon

One specific recommendation he has in mind is for a form of labor insurance. He let if be known last night that he had been making a study of the German ayasem of compensating employees directly for injuries received in the line of their work without the delays and uncertainties imposed by the courts. He believes that each industry should bear the believes that each industry should bear the believes that each industry should bear the believes that each industry should bear injuries and losses inflicted upon workers in that particular line of work and that the system of compensation should operate automatically, making recourse to the courts for reduces unnecessary.

Labor Commissioner Neill said that it was a mistake to assume that last night's event at the White House was a disappointment. The interchange of views which took place was, Mr. Neill said highly profitable and gave promise of a better understanding on questions affecting abor and the courts. The impression that he had to the state of the courts of the interchange of views which took place was, Mr. Neill said highly profitable and gave promise of a better understanding on questions affecting a better understanding on questions affecting a profit and the courts. The impression that he had the courts are the white helps to their commands and its bemocrats who will sit in the final session of the Sixtieth or present companies of the best understanding and present to the permitted upon the two parties in the several State in the total number of Reprehentations. "We heard many honeyed words, but hope that it will result in more than Gavagan said that he had already

He believed, he said, that legislation should be engated to facilitate in the courts a hearing on the merits of the questions involved in labor injuncti that the time of hearing should ed by law and that oral testimony should be taken as well as testimony by Several suggestions were made to the ent at the dinner last night by some of the labor leaders.

P. H. Morrissey, Grand Master of the Railway Trainmen, suggested that Congress ought to enact a bill of rights patterned after some of the bills of like character that exist in States where, he said, the labor problem had been successfully dealt with by legislative enactment. The Desidant was upped to recommend to President was urged to recommend to Congress that it pass a law that would definitely define the rights of labor. This definitely define the rights of labor. This idea was not brought out clearly in detail, the impression conveyed being that it involved a general statute covering every phase of the labor question.

T. J. Dolan, general secretary of the International Brotherhood of Steam Shovel and Dredge Men, expressed the belief that if there was more publicity regarding quarrels between capital and abor, particularly as to the causes lead regarding quarrels between capital and labor, particularly as to the causes leading up to them, many strikes might be avoided, since public opinion would not support a strike that had no good cause behind it. He suggested the creation of a Federal board with authority to institute and the public strikes a register and keep the public vestigate, mediate and keep the public informed as to conditions.

As to what may come of it all there is much left for conjecture, but the President evidently intends to leave a few concrete suggestions for the benefit of posterity before going out of office. He has been careful to impress upon his callers that he seeks to avoid binding his successor and would not admit today that his annual message would forecast the policies he has in mind for the benefit of labor. One suggestion made to him to-day that he use the information obtained at the dinner in his annual message he promptly repelled with the Magistrate Furlong, in the Gates avenue court in Brooklyn, yesterday dismissed the complaint against Charles H. Luhressen, the ex-policeman who was charged with engaging in the liquor business while on the police force and failing to make an arrest for excise violation.

The Magistrate held that the rules of the Police Department provide for pun-ishment for the first offence and that ishment for the first offence and that Luhressen was on sick leave at the time of the alleged excise violation and that there were two other officers present when the offence was committed.

It was soon after the discovery that Luhressen was running a saloon in Williamsburg that he was tried for another offence and bounced from the force.
